▶ What is a Domain Name?

A Domain Name is an addressing concept, used for finding and identifying computers on the Internet.

▶ Why do I need a Domain Name?

Use of the Internet is growing fast, and on the Internet your Domain Name is your own unique identity. No two parties can ever hold the same Domain Name simultaneously; therefore your Internet identity is totally unique. If you're an individual or part of an organisation or business, your Domain Name is your own online brand. It becomes your online business card and provides email and website addresses for a professional look – your own. Your Domain Name should closely relate to your brand or organisation identity, e.g your brand name or company name. Many also register more generic Domain Names that relate to their industry or what they do.

▶ Whose at the party?

In general, the parties involved in Domain Names are;

- The Registry – a country level organisation controlling the “register” of all Domain Names in its control. In NZ, this is Internet-NZ.
- The Registrar – a seller of Domain Names e.g. FreeParking that operates with the Registry, and the Registrant.
- The Registrant – also known as the Name Holder, who is the entity with exclusive use of the Domain Name.

▶ What types of Domain Names are there?

In New Zealand the following country code Domain Name types are available;

- .ac.nz - Tertiary educational institutions and related organisations
- .co.nz - Commercial organisations and businesses
- .gen.nz - Individuals and other organisations not covered elsewhere
- .govt.nz – For Government departments and organisations.*
- .iwi.nz - Maori tribe, typified by a Trust Board
- .mil.nz – For Military.*
- .net.nz - Organisations and service providers directly related to the NZ Internet

- .org.nz - Not-for-profit organisations
- .school.nz - Primary, secondary and pre-schools and related organisations

* These names are moderated.

▶ .com or .co.nz?

.com, .net, .org, .biz and .info Domain Names are also available to anyone on a first come first served basis. These typically signify US/ International focused entities and are best suited for customers whose core focus is the international, not domestic market. If your target audience are primarily within New Zealand, then .nz Domain Names are more appropriate. Note – Many companies have both .co.nz and .com Domain Names.

▶ .biz and .info?

These are new Domain Names released in October 2001. First come first served, and most suitable for customers involved in business or information services respectively. They are a good option when the .com version of a name is already taken, or you want to protect your online brand.

▶ Domain Names are exclusive.

There is only one of any Domain Name, e.g. www.freeparking.co.nz

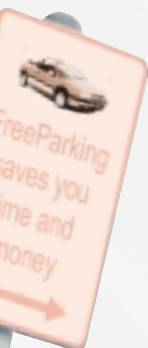

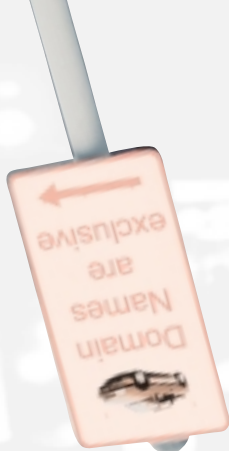

▶ It's first come, first served.

NZ's Domain Name space operates on a first come first served basis.

Any entity can register any Domain Name, so long as it is available.

▶ What's the legal position?

While there is some consumer protection particularly with Trade Mark names or existing business names, Domain Name disputes are often messy, and prolonged. Internet-NZ is considering a UDRP (uniform dispute resolution policy) at present. For more on Internet-NZ and their work, see their website. www.internetnz.net.nz
